The $2.8 billion Midway Crossing development in Ronkonkoma would modernize the Long Island economy while bringing high-paying jobs to Suffolk County and paving the way for expansion of Long Island MacArthur Airport, the project's developers said Thursday.

In a statement Wednesday, Islip Supervisor Angie Carpenter called Midway Crossing a “transformative project, which would not burden our property taxpayers, [but] would instead fully utilize our highly-educated workforce, provide high-paying jobs, and keep our young people on Long Island, long into the future.”

In a joint letter of support to Sen. Chuck Schumer in early May, eight town supervisors, including Carpenter, expressed support for the project, calling it “a regional and national attraction” for residents and visitors alike.
